Moving on...

Question type: Text

Fermentation is a traditional food processing technique that uses microorganisms like yeast to make foods such as yogurt, cheese, and beer.

Precision fermentation is a similar food processing technique, except that the microorganisms have had their DNA altered to make food products. Precision fermentation has been used by the UK food industry for years e.g., to make citric acid which is a common preservative in foods.

The UK food industry is currently exploring how to make precision-fermented dairy products. For example, putting cow DNA into yeast to make milk and cheese without traditional animal farming. Precision-fermented dairy products are not yet available in the UK.

Question type: Text

[IMAGE slushie_jpg] Slush ice drinks, also known as slushies, are frozen drinks made from flavoured ice. Some slush ice drinks contain glycerol, a substitute for sugar that prevents them from freezing solid.

In July 2025, the Government updated its advice on slush ice drinks containing glycerol to include new age and portion size limits for children. The updated advice recommends slush ice drinks containing glycerol are not consumed by children under seven years of age, and that children under ten should only have one 350ml sized cup of these drinks a day – that's about the size of a fizzy drink can. This is because the glycerol can cause headaches and sickness.
